

Chess Notation

Chess players around the world use “notation,” a universal system for reading and writing chess. It’s easy to learn, and once you know it, you’ll be able to decipher quickly any book or newspaper article on chess.

The vertical columns of squares that run up and down the board are called files and are lettered. The horizontal rows of squares that run sideways are called ranks and are numbered. The intersection of a file and rank gives a square its name. Let’s look at a board that gives the “address” of every square:

a8	b8	c8	d8	e8	f8	g8	h8
a7	b7	c7	d7	e7	f7	g7	h7
a6	b6	c6	d6	e6	f6	g6	h6
a5	b5	c5	d5	e5	f5	g5	h5
a4	b4	c4	d4	e4	f4	g4	h4
a3	b3	c3	d3	e3	f3	g3	h3
a2	b2	c2	d2	e2	f2	g2	h2
a1	b1	c1	d1	e1	f1	g1	h1

To make writing and reading fast, each piece is assigned a single letter. In English, we use these:

King =	K	Knight =	N
Queen =	Q	Rook =	R
Bishop =	B	Pawn =	the file it’s on

So, the move “Qe5” means that the queen moves to the e5-square. Captures are marked with an “x,” as in “axb5,” which means that a pawn on a4 captures a pawn or a piece on b5.

Another special convention: Although the word “exchange” means to trade, “Exchange” (with a capital “E”) means the trade of knight or bishop for a rook. A player who manages this trade “wins the Exchange.”
